

Chicago-area hospital systems sign merger

Resurrection, Provena deal would form state's biggest Catholic-owned health care system

Two Chicago-area hospital groups have signed an agreement to merge, paving the way to create Illinois' largest Catholic-owned health care system, officials announced Tuesday.

The deal between Chicago-based Resurrection Health Care and Mokena-based Provena Health followed months of talks. Resurrection operates six hospitals in the Chicago area and Provena owns six hospitals statewide, including Saint Joseph Medican Center in Joliet.

The combined system would have nearly $3 billion in operating revenue.

Both systems submitted an application to state health officials. Approval of the proposed merger could come this year.

"Together we see a bolder vision of health care," said Sandra Bruce, president and CEO of Resurrection.

"One that excels at the patient, resident and family experience. One that provides high quality and value across the continuum, in true partnership with our physicians and employees. And above all, one that delivers care with compassion, dignity and respect at every stage of life."

In addition to the 12 hospitals, the new system would include 28 long-term care and senior residential facilities, more than 50 primary and specialty care clinics and six home health agencies.

It would employ 5,000 physicians and have more than 22,000 employees.

"The more we talked, the more we realized that through collaboration and equal partnership, we take a major step toward achieving a long-common goal of ensuring for the future access to a vibrant Catholic health system which will enhance our abilities to meet the needs of the communities we are privileged to serve," said Guy Wiebking, president and CEO of Provena Health.

"Together we see a bolder vision of health care."
